

Solidarity with First Nations Peoples

As a union, UFCW Canada has an intrinsic commitment to economic and social justice. Our principles of justice, equality and dignity mean a commitment to solidarity with communities who have been historically oppressed. As such UFCW Canada has always stood shoulder to shoulder with First Nations and Indigenous Peoples in demanding that the government respects the needs and rights of these communities.

UFCW Canada recognizes that when working people are acting in solidarity with one another we have the collective power to effect meaningful change. While recognizing the diversity within our communities we are united as allies to jointly strive for social justice, equality and transformative change.
